OLWENY/EDUCATION

The government acknowledges the key role played by private sector especially in uplifting education standards in the country. Education assistant minister Prof. Ayiecho Olweny says the government especially his ministry acknowledges the role the private sector plays in uplifting education standards adding that it has high stakes for quality education and creation of employment.

He has accused teachers in public primary schools of professional misconduct saying they have passed a vote of no confidence in themselves when they take their children in private academies away from the very schools they teach. Prof Olweny has at the same time urged parents to sacrifice whatever they have and invest in education if they hoped the future society will prosper and take over from them.
